43rd Plymouth Ice Festival will begin tomorrow

When the original organizers of the Plymouth Ice Spectacular" first suggested the event more than 40 years ago, it is doubtful they anticipated the success the event enjoys today.

The 43rd Plymouth Ice Festival officially begins tomorrow throughout the downtown area and is expected to bring as many as 100,000 visitors into the community during the three-day event, according to organizers of the event.

Depending on who is telling the story, the history of the "spectacular" as it was first called, includes the names of many public officials and familiar names associated with the development and growth of the community. All accounts agree, however, that it did begin about 43 years ago. It was in 1982, according to most versions of the tale, when local businessman Scott Lorenz proposed the idea of an annual winter celebration in Kellogg Park after watching a feature story on 60 Minutes about a snow and ice festival in Sapporo, Japan.

Lorenz told his fellow business owners that the segment showed thousands of people from throughout Japan flock into Sapporo to view the giant images of buildings, cartoon characters and assorted subject carved from ice and snow. In an interview several years ago, Lorenz said he was confident the event would bring business to downtown Plymouth.

"If they could do this Sapporo, I knew we could do this in Plymouth," Lorenz said during that interview several years ago. He said he wanted to create an event to bring commerce to downtown merchants and restaurants during the slow retail period after the holidays.

His efforts have obviously proven successful in the past four decades as the event is now rated as one of the top winter events in the state by some tourist bureaus. The crowds have recently reached an estimated 100,000 people coming to view the artistry of the carvers and enjoy the family activities during the three-day event.

Lorenz said the purpose of the event was to bring the community a unique event while providing local retailers and restaurant owners a "much needed shot in the arm" during the slow months in sales after the holidays.

Huge snow sculptures like these were the inspiration for the first "Ice Spectacular" in Plymouth.

During his tenure managing and organizing the "Ice Spectacular" as it was originally called, Lorenz made several trips to Japan and Canada to recruit artists and teachers to participate in the ice carving exhibition. He also negotiated agreements that continue to exist today, including a relationship with local culinary colleges to have students exhibit during the show.

Lorenz, however, said there are many other people who deserve recognition for the continued growth and longevity of the event. He said after his epiphany about having an ice festival in the city, he tried to recruit volunteers and sponsors for the event. He said the first two men he talked with about his idea were his father, Ralph, who at that time owned the former Mayflower Hotel and Hank Graper, the city manager at the time.

While the elder Lorenz thought his son's idea was "crazy," Graper talked to downtown businesses and secured $1,000 in early donations. With that money and "lots of walking and talking," the duo hosted the first ice festival 45-days after Lorenz saw the 60 Minutes feature.

With Lorenz as the leader of the event and Graper working behind the scenes, the script for success lasted for more than 10 years.

Former mayor, county commissioner ends 21-year career in local government

Wayne County Commissioner Abdul "Al" Haidous was hailed as a pioneer and inspiration to a new generation of county leaders during his final commission meeting in December.

Haidous (D-Wayne) chose not to seek re-election this fall after serving 10 years as a county commissioner.

A native of Lebanon and long-time resident and former mayor of Wayne, Haidous received tributes from numerous colleagues and county officials during the meeting.

Wayne County Executive Warren C. Evans praised Haidous as not just an outstanding Arab American but a great American and dedicated community leader.

"He has been, in my mind, a real statesman. We may not always have agreed on everything but he has never been disagreeable," Evans said, noting there were times when Haidous prompted a 180-degree shift in his opinion on certain issues.

Other county officials, including deputy Executive Assad Turfe, Undersheriff Mike Jaafar, Homeland Security Director Sam Jaafar, and Health and Human Services Director Abdul Al-Sayad credited Haidous as a personal inspiration.

Turfe cited Haidous' 2001 election as mayor – two months after 9/11 and in a city with only 10 Arab American residents – as a turning point for the community and county at large.

"We had thought we could only be employees of a department, we could only be staffers but you showed us there is a way," Turfe said.

Others cited their personal ties to the Haidous family.

Wayne County Commission Chair Alisha Bell (D-Detroit) noted that her father was a frequent customer of Al's Friendly Market, the Wayne business Haidous and his wife, Mary, operated for some 35 years.

Commissioner David Knezek (D-Dearborn Heights) remembered playing sports at the Wayne recreation center now named in Haidous' honor.

Incoming District 11 Commissioner Al Wilson said he expected to work closely with Haidous on community issues, including those involving infrastructure and the environment.

Commissioner Sam Baydoun (D-Dearborn), a longtime friend, was among those who called Haidous, "the perfect example of the American Dream."

Haidous first emigrated from Lebanon to Africa before arriving in the United States as a young man.

He operated his family market for 35 years and was instrumental in garnering support from the Ford Wayne Assembly Plant to create a local youth baseball league.

In addition to his roles as county commission and mayor, Haidous also served on the Wayne City Council and Zoning Board of Appeals and many other city bodies.

He has served 10 years as chair of the SMART regional transportation authority board and was the county commission representative on the Detroit Wayne County Metropolitan Airport Authority Board.

He and his wife are the parents of five children, several of whom attended the ceremony, and 12 grandchildren.

The commission's 11th District includes Wayne, Belleville, Flat Rock, Romulus, as well as Sumpter, Van Buren and Huron townships.

Wayne County Commissioner Abdul 'Al' Haidous was honored for his years of outstanding service to the people of Wayne County during his official retirement in December. Haidous, at left, was honored by Commission Vice-Chair Joseph Palamara, Commission Chair Alisha Bell and Commission Vice-Chair Pro Tempore Sam Baydoun.

Festival

Current City Manager Paul Sincock, who worked as assistant manager under Graper, said his former boss was dedicated to the ice-carving event from the beginning.

"The festival came along at a time when there was a downturn in the economy," said Sincock, during that previous interview. He credited Graper with realizing the potential of this event as not only an economic engine, but also as an entertaining event which would bring the community together.

"He's the guy that got things moving and kept them moving along," Sincock said.

In 1992, the spectacular event faced a crisis when Lorenz decided to step down as organizer for the event during the same time Graper's contract with the city expired. With the festival dates set and the two leaders leaving, a local real estate developer- along with members of the Plymouth Community Chamber of Commerce- stepped in.

"I was asked to help out with raising money," said the late Jim Jabara, a former city mayor who became more involved with the event after then chamber President Pam Kosteva teamed him up with Tom Caviston to raise the necessary proceeds to keep the event afloat. The team was able to generate $140,000 and Lorenz credits Jabara and his fellow fundraisers for keeping the ice festival alive during that perilous time.

Management of the event was then entrusted to Mike Watts of WattsUp who organized the ice festival for several years and guided the community event through some difficult economic times.

In 2009, the ice festival was nearly retired due to the difficult economy, when the decision was made to hire Sam Walton of Signature Professional Group to manage the event. Walton began a recovery effort and when he moved on, James Gietzen of JAG entertainment took the helm of the event.

Gietzen rejuvenated the event adding more family and participant events while expanding the number of carvings on display and the number of artisans who demonstrate their skills during the famous ice-carving competitions and several other features which have become traditions at the festival.

The Sapporo Japan Ice and Snow Sculpture Show continues to attract thousands of visitors annually.

The ice festival, thanks to major community sponsors, continues to be free and open to the public and with 100,000 visitors expected this year, has regained the enormous popularity that Lorenz once envisioned as he watched 60 Minutes more than four decades ago.

Northville Township names new deputy treasurer

Longtime Northville Township Board of Trustees member Mindy Herrmann has accepted the role of deputy teasurer for the 32,000-resident community. She was sworn in recently by Clerk Cynthia L. Jankowski at township hall.

Herrmann was appointed by Treasurer Jason Rhines to fill the vacancy left by Trustee Scott Frush, who died suddenly Jan. 11.

In this role, Herrmann would perform the duties of the treasurer in the event Rhines is absent, ill or otherwise unable to fulfill the responsibilities of a treasurer.

"Scott Frush left big shoes to fill," said treasurer Rhines. "I'm confident Mindy Herrmann is an excellent choice for this role. She has a long history of protecting public funds. She always has our residents, our taxpayers, top of mind when making any decision. Thank you, Mindy, for stepping up after Northville Township lost a longtime champion of the community."

Herrmann has served on the board of trustees since 2008. She currently is on the Parks and Recreation Commission, the Planning Commission and is chair of the Pathways Committee.

She earned her Bachelor of Science degree from the United States Naval Academy, then joined the Marine Corps, where she spent 28 years as an officer, retiring from service in 2016. She also graduated from a master's level Marine Corps program called "Command and Staff," a course dedicated to strategizing at the highest level. Currently, she is executive director of both the Eastern District of Michigan Federal Bar Association and the Federal Bar Association Eastern District of Michigan Chapter.

On her off time, she has a passion for physical fitness, enjoys pickleball and has called Northville Township home for 24 years. She is married to Fred, an attorney, whom she met at the Naval Academy. They have two adult daughters who graduated from Northville Public Schools, one who is currently the assistant cross-country running coach for Northville High School, her alma mater.

"It's a privilege to give back to this wonderful community, where our family has thrived through the years," Herrmann said. "I take my responsibility of helping oversee Northville Township's public service delivery seriously and this new responsibility will benefit from my years of experience working on projects with complex goals and budgets. I'm looking forward to helping our residents in a new capacity."
